TITLE OF THE RESEARCH TOPIC: The impact of national law on the functioning of EU rules on jurisdiction in civil matters.

BRIEF DESCRIPTION OF THE RESEARCH TOPIC: EU rules on jurisdiction in civil and commercial matters are to a large extent immune from the influence of national rules. Their “isolation”, however, is not absolute. On the one hand, since EU rules are meant to apply in the context of national proceedings, the issue arises of their coordination, having regard both to the primacy of EU law and to the autonomy of national procedural law. On the other hand, EU jurisdictional rules are sometimes designed in such a way as to involve a reference to substantive domestic rules, through conflict of law rules. For instance, some EU rules rely on the applicable (domestic) rules for the purposes of assessing the localization of a connecting factor, whereas others do so for the purposes of determining whether a given prerequisite for the operation (e.g., the existence of a valid jurisdictional agreement) is met in the circumstances. The research will discuss the intersection between EU law and national rules in the field of civil jurisdiction. The grantee will analyse the most significant occurrences of the described phenomenon, and will sketch the general background against which the phenomenon itself must be addressed.

ACADEMIC DISCIPLINE : SECS-P/02 ECONOMIC POLICY	n. 1 position.

DURATION: one year; can be renewed.

TUTOR: Prof. Maurizio Luigi BAUSSOLA.

TITLE OF THE RESEARCH TOPIC: Productivity growth, wages, and the impact on inflation and unemployment.

BRIEF DESCRIPTION OF THE RESEARCH TOPIC: The dynamics of labour productivity have always been crucial to understanding the developmental pace of a country or the growth path of industries. Technological change is viewed as the driver of productivity enhancement, together with the ability of firms to exploit the innovative opportunities that are then made available. The close relationship between productivity and technological change became contradictory in the early 1980s, in that productivity growth declined despite the spread of information and communication technologies. Later periods also saw an inconsistent path, with first a new increase and then a drop in productivity, even with the extensive use of technologies related to the internet. A complementary issue to these productivity patterns is the dynamics of wages. The simultaneous analysis of these two variables is relevant because their misalignment raises issues related to competitiveness, inflation, unemployment, and, ultimately, income distribution. The macroeconomic picture for OECD countries indicates a significant and constant decoupling of labour productivity growth and wage growth from the mid-1990s. This has resulted in a significantly lower growth rate for the latter. However, Italy was characterized by lower growth rates for productivity and wages during the 2000s. Oddly, the productivity growth rate was sometimes lower than wages, thus adding additional challenges to the entire economy. The recent surge in commodities and oil prices following the pandemic and the Ukraine war raises issues as to whether such inflationary pressures will be temporary or permanent and, therefore, whether productivity growth will be adequate to offset the expected wage increase. The impact on the labour market and, therefore, on unemployment and the employment rate can be significant, thus threatening the future growth rate of the economy. Finally, the research project will require the application of econometric methods both in a time series and panel framework, using firm data and macro data derived from the national accounts or the labour force survey.

TITLE OF THE RESEARCH PROJECT: Digital platforms as a bargaining tool for the public administration.

BRIEF DESCRIPTION OF THE RESEARCH PROJECT: The research will examine the digital tools that allow the matching of supply and demand in the context of public contracts, also in light of the 2014 European directives and the Draft reform of the public contracts code currently under discussion in the Italian Parliament. In particular, the research will investigate, also from a de iure condendo perspective, the digitization and computerization interventions that can simplify procedures, while providing certainty of the timing of the stipulation and execution of contracts. Furthermore, the research aims to investigate, in a transversal way with respect to the traditional dichotomy public law/private law, which are the most suitable safeguards and remedies to ensure compliance with the “rules of the game”, promoting the economic and legal objectives underlying the regulation of digital platforms.

TUTOR: Prof. Luigi GALASSO

TITLE OF THE RESEARCH PROJECT: Landscape of Italy in Roman Satire (I cent. AD).

BRIEF DESCRIPTION OF THE RESEARCH PROJECT: Although the general idea of landscape should be acknowledged as a modern category, it still proves a key concept and a provocative starting point to develop a thorough analysis of the representation of urban and natural spaces in Roman satire, especially in Persius and Juvenal. In Persius' satires, brief but intense sketches of landscape, such as that of Luni in 6.6-8, provide an opportunity for a complex intertextual discourse, where the vision of landscape conveys a meditation on satirical models (Horace and the idea of the angulus, as well as Ennius). Landscape is an essential element in Juvenal's satires, whether it may be regarded as the literary creation of an 'urban hell' (sat. 3), in contrast with the idealized - albeit threatened by contemporary moral corruption (3.12-20) - vision of the countryside (3.171-179), or as exotic imagery with grotesque overtones (sat. 15). The aim of the research will be the achievement of an overall treatment of landscape in Persius and Juvenal, with special attention to the relationship with their models (esp. Horace) and to the choices of language and style that prelude to the “invention” of a literary idea of nature and landscape. The grant holder is required to give a coherent contribution to the study of the subject, based on sound philological method and detailed knowledge of the most recent bibliography on these themes.

TITLE OF THE RESEARCH PROJECT: Sustainable innovations for regenerative agriculture in the Mediterranean area (SIRAM).

BRIEF DESCRIPTION OF THE RESEARCH PROJECT: Sustainable innovation for regenerative agriculture in the Mediterranean area (SIRAM) will provide a comprehensive integration and implementation of sustainable solutions for regenerative agriculture across different Mediterranean areas, addressing at the same time issues of low incomes at smallholder farm level. A multidisciplinary team will tackle from different perspectives issues related to soil degradation, over-use of chemical inputs, climate change, desertification, environmental risks and low-incomes at smallholder farms level. The candidate will work on the evaluation of the agro-ecological results of selected strategies for (i) maintaining high yield levels of major field crops, (ii) increasing the carbon dioxide sequestration potential of soils, and (iii) promoting efficient nutrients use, reducing losses and negative environmental impact.

TUTOR: Prof. Luigi BAVARESCO.

TITLE OF THE RESEARCH PROJECT: Recovering and valorization of cv. Barbera ancient germplasm for adaptation to climate change (AGEBA).

BRIEF DESCRIPTION OF THE RESEARCH PROJECT: The aim of the project is to address the issue of climate change in viticulture from a genetic and agronomic point of view. Intravarietal variability of the Barbera variety will be evaluated by molecular investigations based on the use of SSR and SNP markers. SNPs will be developed by using the Genotyping by Sequencing approach. The genetic investigation will be associated with a detailed phenotyping, in order to identify genotypes with characteristics of adaptability to climate change, in particular having increased resistance to some biotic and abiotic agents and a reduced capacity to accumulate sugar in the berries. Individual Barbera plants (about 80), planted in the pre clonal-selection period (up to the 70s of the XXth) having useful traits for climate change adaptation and freet from main viruses and Flavescence dorée/Black wood, will be identified and exploited. Additionally, two agronomic techniques will be evaluated under field conditions: late pruning will be tested with the aim of postponing vegetative and reproductive growth and delaying ripening of Barbera grapes; in a second trial, effects of foliar application of protein hydrolysates on vine physiology and productive traits will be assessed according to the occurrence of multiple summer stress.
