On the other hand, the purpose is to examine the relation between ESG criteria, credit evaluation and firm's performance, the latter being measured in terms of profitability, growth, productivity, value added, etc. From the empirical standpoint, the econometric and statistical analysis will be carried out using firm survey data and balance sheet information taken from, for example, AIDA Bureau van Dijk. Overall, the research aims at combining considerations related to the determinants of firm performance with issues dealing with the measurement of ESG ratings and their impact on firm performance.

TITLE OF THE RESEARCH PROJECT: The evaluation and reporting of climate change impacts on corporate performance.

BRIEF DESCRIPTION OF THE RESEARCH PROJECT: Climate change represents an increasingly relevant risk for companies and their interaction with environment, society, and the economy. At the same time, companies, with their own activities, directly contribute to the increasing effect induced by human action on the climate. The corporate reporting about the impacts generated on the environment represents today one of the main disclosure challenges but measuring these impacts remains difficult and opacity prevails despite the European Union having introduced specific regulations calling for a higher level of transparency. The research project aims to develop an in-depth analysis on the measurement and reporting of the impacts linked to climate change by companies with a focus on the agri-food sector. The research will be developed by evaluating if climate related risk is considered exclusively in its ecological-environmental dimension or by adopting a more comprehensive ESG approach. The project also aims to deepen the analysis of the standards, regulatory and taxation approaches that can encourage companies to adopt environmental and social reporting practices.
